ImmuneBiotech and Taranis enter strategic collaboration agreement to provide clinical development services

ImmuneBiotech is a leading preclinical Contract Research Organization (CRO) based at Medicon Village in Lund and a member of Lund Life Science Incubator. The company's services include a wide range of drug discovery and preclinical development services, spanning from immune cell biology, through efficacy animal models to clinical sample analysis.

Taranis offer private medical care and occupational health assessments in Sweden. The company is founded and directed by Dr. Tobias Andersson, Chairman and surgeon at the Ellenbogen Medical Center in Malmö.

"During the years ImmuneBiotech has helped many research groups, pharmaceutical and medical device companies advance their innovations through preclinical efficacy phases. We have identified a need for a local consulting partner who is highly qualified with the clinical expertise required to assist our clients with their products from discovery through the post-approval stage" says Dr. Shahram Lavasani, CEO of ImmuneBiotech. "Dr. Andersson is a highly respected and an outstanding clinician with experience in the planning, management, and conduct of clinical research trials. Our collaboration will offer a streamlined service to our clients for efficient translation of preclinical research into early phase clinical studies. This approach, together with our expertise in clinical trial design and protocol preparation, will provide our clients with the ability to accelerate their development and to outperform competitors."
